

Spine Information

To learn more about your spine, spinehealth, and available spinecare go to the International Spine Association (ISA) at www.spineinformation.org. The primary mission of the ISA is to improve spinehealth and spinecare through education. The ISA is committed to disseminating need-to-know information through the World Wide Web in numerous languages covering many topics related to the spine, including information about spine disorders, spine health, advances in technology and available spinecare.

The ISA has one of the largest online searchable databases of information about the spine and spinecare. The American Academy of Spine Physicians (AASP), a highly respected member-based organization, is one of the greatest contributors of information to the ISA. The ISA also has organizational members which offer additional topic specific information and support.

Many physicians and other healthcare professionals refer their patients to the ISA for information. The ISA offers script forms for us by healthcare professional and also provides a brochure titled the Online Public Information Center both which can be accessed below.
